"Let's declare war on Georgia!"

Let's go to war!

Governor Edwards poses as a Conservative of the Hard Right, one of those rightwingers who make Bill Buckley wince in embarrassment. But look at him now: Governer Edwards is acting like a true pinko peacenik, an appeaser, a traitor to the fine, upstanding traditions of the Olde South. I refer, of course, to the current border dispute between Georgia and South Carolina. You've read in the papers, haven't you, of the fight over shrimping (and oil-leasing) waters at the mouth of the Savannah River?

Well it's perfectly obvious that a real red-blooded heterosexual Southern governor would straightaway declare war (pronounced wau-wah). That yellerbelly governor hasn't even put the South Carolina militia on alert yet, at least not as far as we've heard.

Now Governor Edwards is known in these parts as something of a gunslinger (See Osceola, June 3). It would certainly be the crowning feather in his cap, the piece de resistance of his all-glorious administration, to lead the gallant troops of the South Carolina National Guard in a second burning of Atlanta. He could play Teddy Roosevelt at San Juan Hill. South Carolina would once again stand in the forefront of human rights. Last time it was to ensure that planters kept their right to own slaves; this time it would be to guarantee that fishermen keep their right to own shrimps.

It's a sad note, that the South Carolina State Legislature, deliberative body of the utmost repute throughout the civilized world, that aggregation of singular genius and gravity, has failed to even raise a whimper. Where are the fiery scenes to match those ancient sessions in which South Carolina's finest determined to secede from the Union rather than accept the notion on that the black was human and thus deserving of equal rights?

> "Now Governor Edwards is known in these parts as something of a gunslinger. It would certainly be the crowning feather in his cap, the piece de resistance of his administration, to lead the gallant troops of the S.C. National Guard in a second burning of Atlanta..."

It seems the spirit of patriotism has wilted in the New South. Where once the stubborn mentality of the plantation-owner ruled, now the unctuous babble of the Chamber of Commerce takes over. Why, it's enough to make one pour his grits down the toilet and burn his autographed photo of Strom Thurmond, standing foolishly on his head. Yes, it even tempts one to start pronouncing his "i"s with a Northern inflection.

The lillylivered governor plans to let the U.S. Supreme Court settle the border dispute. Isn't that something? Now, if it was the South Carolina Supreme Court, that would be all right. We know they all good 'ol boys on th' sta-ate Sue-preme Coat. But the U.S. Supreme Court has those card-carrying Commies like Burger, Powell, Rhenquist, and the rest.

Yet the border issue isn't important. By damnation, we ought to use it merely as an excuse to wage war on Georgia. After all, Georgia's been far too uppity for far too long. Just because it has Lester Maddox and the heavy Ku Klux Klan leaders and Coca-Cola and now, of course, Billy Carter--well, you'd think it had a copyright on authentic Southernese, as presented in the national media. Georgia's gotten all the glory for too damn long.

I propose that we outfit the State Legislators in confederate grays and let them serve as officers for the National Guard troops. Take some of those cannons from the Battery in Charleston, and get patriotic good ole boys to donate their hunting rifles. Gov. Edwards can use his Motorcyclist Special revolver. (The one he wore when motorcycle helmet opponents made black threats to the Esteemed Governor.) For the air force, why not use Sheriff Frank Powell's new police plane with the siren and the machineguns. As for psychological warfare, Ben Dekle could make subversive broadcasts aimed at Georgia; we could air-drop 8 by 10 glossies of "TV 19's" Art James on suburban Atlanta, thus to bring the women of Georgia to their knees, sobbing with desire. (And if the state runs low on fuel during its war, we can always squeeze out Art James's bouffant hairdo, which would easily yield enough oil to last a year.)

A few years ago, the fashion was to say "kill the gooks" in these regions. Now we can change it to "kill the crackers." And just think of the prestige we'd incur; South Carolina would no longer be a provincial backwater, a fifth-rate state, an area void of distinction. No, South Carolina would be splashed all over the nation's front pages. The networks would have camera crews crawling all over the state. Secretary of State Vance would shuttle between Columbia and Atlanta, or ironically, Andy Young would.

There's only one problem I see. I've done weeks of intensive research. I've spent days in solitary meditation and prayer. I've sought the advice of Mr. Knozit, on the tube, and W.D. "Bill" Workman in the paper. And finally, with the help of all this wisdom, I've determined that it's not outside the realm of possibility that President Carter, since he's a Georgian, would take a dim view of our war. He might even send in "advisors", to be followed by Special Forces troops, and a massive U.S. involvement. Maybe that's the reason Governor Edwards hasn't yet officially declared war on Georgia.

What's the South coming to?

On the road for apartheid

Governor James Edwards is off on a two-week, all -expenses-paid-by-Preoria tour of South Africa. Apparently the apartheid-preaching white leadership felt it could use a few friendly American political faces popping up in the wake of recent verbal attacks by U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young. What better choice than Edwards, a conservative anti-communist from the American South whose racial liberalism doesn't extend much further than a fifty-cent tip to the bellboy at the Mills Hyatt House.

And the South African government is already getting its money's worth. No sooner did Edwards arrive in South Africa than he announced on television that President Carter's human rights stance in international affairs "has been a little overdone." If we're not going to pick on the Russians, from whom we buy chrome, he argued, then we should lay off Rhodesia as well. After all, the Russian government is communistic--the Rhodesians are just racists.

Edwards didn't stop there. Peace in Africa, he said, will come only after South Africa takes a leadership role in southern African affairs. And the riots in South Africa have been "blown up out of all proportion" by the American press. (Edwards had been in the county less than 24 hours when he offered this gem.) America, Edwards said, doesn't give a damn about the plight of blacks in African countries where they are "enslaved by blacks...only when there is some conflict between white and black do human rights come to bear."

Finally, Edwards told South African television viewers that America could not criticize South Africa's white leadership for apartheid policies since the U.S. has its own racial problems. Hell, he concluded, instead of trying to induce investors to withdraw funds from South Africa, American should be investing more money there.

All this during Edwards' first day on the job. Lord only knows what our esteemed governor, the Ambassador from Whitedom, will do or say before his two-week visit ends. But don't be too surprised if after the South African white regime falls you read that regime leaders have set up a government-in-exile in Charleston. They've already learned that South Carolinians are their kind of folks.

St. Phillips development

Developer O. Stanley Smith Jr. has submitted revised plans for the development of St. Phillips Island in Beaufort County to the U.S. Coast Guard and the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control. Both agencies are now accepting comments and objections prior to making decisions on permitting and certifying the project.

The development of St. Phillips Island has been a controversial subject since Smith first announced his plans to build a luxury resort on the barrier island in 1973. Environmentalists and conservationists have contended the island is a vanishing natural resource. too fragile to withstand significant development.

A recent study completed by a USC scientist for the Coast Guard found that the island is highly vulnerable to flooding and will be totally inundated on the average of once every 25 years. The study also found that erosion, significantly exacerbated by constructior. of the development, will destroy valuable tidal areas surrounding the island.

Several environmental organizations are actively opposing the project The Environmental Defense Fund in Washington, D.C. has indicated it will bring suit if the development receives approval from state and federal agencies.

In a two-part series which appeared in Osceola in March, 1977, editor John Norton reviewed the current controversy and described Smith's recent attempts to revise project plans sufficiently to meet Coast Guard and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' objections. The Corps' involvement centered on dredging operations required to develop the island--operations which Smith and Corps now contend will be unnecessary. Coast Guard involvement began when Smith made application for a permit to construct a mile-long bridge linking St. Phillips with nearby St. Helena Island and the Beaufort mainland. The Coast Guard is required to license structures that may hinder navigation. The Environmental Defense Fund and other national conservation organizations contend the Coast Guard must also fully consider the total impact that the bridge, and thus the development, will have on the island and surrounding environments. Indications are, however, that the Coast Guard will attempt to take a narrower view of its permitting responsibilities and limit its "primary" considerations to the physical impact of the bridge--which most parties in the controversy concede will be negligible.

DHEC must certify the revised project in accordance with provisions of Section 401 of the 1972 federal Water and Pollution Control Act. State approval was quickly granted when Smith submitted his original plans several years ago, and there is little reason to expect DHEC to do otherwise in regard to the "improved" plans.

O. Stanley Smith Jr. is former director of the state TEC system and owner of the Constan carwash chain. He is presently chief of the Fripp Island resort development in Beaufort county. Smith is known to have already invested almost three million dollars in the St. Phillips project, much of it in loans from South Carolina savings and loan associations. He has offered to sell the island on several occasions to conservation organizations, but the price was always too high or the money

rumors & speculation

The Jenrette scenario

Speculation department-One of those anonymous political observers you're always reading about in Osceola dropped by the office recently and offered this sage comment: Congressman John Jenrette (who says he is seriously considering a run) can have the Democratic nomination in the 1978 U.S. Senate race against Strom Thurmond if he wants it. And with a little luck, Jenrette can be our U.S. Senator.

Here's the scenario, as laid out by our observer:

Although much of the conventional thinking has it that recently-announced Senatorial candidate Pug Ravenel is a shoo-in in the spring '78 Democratic primary, Ravenel has a lot of problems that a Jenrette candidacy could capitalize on.

First and foremost is Ravenel's "pariah" image among many of the party's big-money men. Ravenel's failure to endorse last-minute candidate Bryan Dorn in '74 and his general failure to kow-tow to Big Demo Money leaves the door open for another Democrat more, well, acceptable (receptive, pliable, manageable, you fill in the blank). Jenrette fits the bill. "Where," our observer asks, "is Pug going to raise in-state money with Jenrette in the race?"

The same goes for what our observer calls the "courthouse crowd," the not-to-be-dimissed remnants of the old Democratic machine politics, still alive and well in many rural areas, and ill but kicking in the urban centers. The courthouse crowd doesn't like or understand Pug's reform talk. And they haven't forgiven him for dumping on W.J.B. either.

Jenrette, our observer contends, would take most of the black vote. His Congressional record on issues of preeminent concern to blacks is impressive. Pug has no record. His support in the black community has always been considered somewhat soft. And political soothsayer Lee Bandy, the State's Washington correspondent, says blacks are asking disturbing questions about Ravenel's solicitation of Northern Republican dollars to pay off his '74 campagin debts.

Jenrette would attract most of the increasingly significant organized labor vote in the state. Some observers interpret his rather startling attack on Spartanburg's giant Deering Milliken textile corporation last week as a bold move to solidify labor support for a possible Senate run. Jenrette, of course, is no stranger to organized labor--his Congressional voting record clearly indicates his pro-labor stance and labor money has figured significantly in his campaign financing in the past. Pug, for all his populist appeal, is after all an investment banker with Republican money connections. Our observer chalks up labor votes and money in Jenrette's column.

The biggest factor working in Jenrette's favor, our observer says, is the Strom Thurmond vote. Under current state law, nothing prevents Thurmond supporters from voting in the Democratic primary. And our observer believes they will vote for the man they perceive to be the weakest primary candidate; i.e. John Jenrette. "As much as 30 percent of Jenrette's support in a primary would come from people who will vote for Thurmond in the general election,"the observer predicts.

Our observer concedes Jenrette has suffered somewhat from a grand jury investigation into his business affairs. But no indictments were forthcoming, and Jenrette has loudly declared he has been cleared. Barring the emergence of new evidence dirtying Jenrette, it won't be a campaign issue. And our observer thinks Ravenel seriously damaged himself by (a) failing to seek the governorship in '78 after selling his vision of a new, improved South Carolina in 1974; and (b) offering as an explanation for not seeking the governorship the lame excuse that all the problems present in 1974 have vanished in the wake of Governor James Edwards' administration and an enlightened state legislature. The observer believes Jenrette's image is "progressive" enough to pull in votes from the 25-to-40 set who are disenchanted with Ravenel.

Jenrette

Add all that up, our observer argues, and you have a Jenrette victory next spring.

But how, you ask, can Jenrette beat Thurmond in the fall? The Anonymous Observer answers that if Pug can beat Thurmond, then Jenrette can. "You have to assume Thurmond is ripe for the plucking," he says. Either primary winner will get national Democratic money and probably personal support from Jimmy Carter (if he wants it).

"Jenrette will get all the money and all the votes that Ravenel can expect," our observer believes, "plus some." The "plus" would be Pug-haters in the state Democratic party mean enough to vote for Thurmond, and perhaps a bit more of the black vote. (As several political writers have noted lately, Thurmond, the consummate political animal, has surprising support among blacks who witnessed his hand on the federal-dollar dipper during the Nixon administation.)

Heavy into his role as devil's advocate our observer tosses in a few other Jenrette "pluses." He's young (41); he's a vigorous campaigner and a proven winner; he's good-looking; he's a fairly effective speaker; he projects well on the tube; Pug's attributes, in other words. So who needs Pug?

That's the scenario. We don't necessarily buy it; you don't have to either. But it's very likely the dream house Jenrette builds in his mind when he talks about the "seriousness" of his candidacy.

wasn't available. Smith has indicated recently he is no longer interested in selling the island for preservation, but if permits are denied environmental groups believe he will have no choice.

A source within the U.S. Enviromental Protection Agency told Osceola Smith has met with EPA Atlanta regional director Jack Ravan and Ravan assured Smith EPA will "cause no problems" in Smith's attempts to get the project underway.

Judicial chauvinism

The New York Times reported Sunday that a coalition of women's groups in California were picketing outside the California Court of Appeals in Los Angeles to protest a recent court decision written by Justice Lynn D. Compton which overturned a guilty verdict in the rape of a woman hitchhiker. In the unanimous opinion, Compton wrote, "It may not speak well of the prevailing standard of morality in society, but women hitchhikers should anticipate sexual advances from men who pick them up."

Compton said that in light of all the warnings that appeared almost daily in the news media, a lone woman hitchhiker on the streets of a metropolitan area like Los Angeles should at least forsee the possibility that a man who picks her up will make sexual advances. A woman who enters a man's car, he stated, "advertises that she has less concern for the consequences than the average female."

The decision brought to mind another case in Madison, Wis., where a campaign is now under way to recall a judge who made a similar decision in another rape case. A 17-year-old boy was accused of raping a woman who the judge said was wearing sexually explicit clothing. Judge Archie E. Simonson said Madison was known as a sexually permissive community and asked, "Should we punish a 15 or 16-year-old boy who reacts to it normally?" The boy was allowed to remain at home under court supervision rather than being placed in a rehabilitation center.

Representatives of several women's groups and others are describing the recent decisions as setbacks in a nationwide effort to encourage rape victims to report the incidents to police. California state senator Alan Robbins, who sponsored landmark antirape legislation in the California legislature last year said, "for the past five years, women's groups and legislators have tried to foster an environment in which women wouldn't be afraid to report that they had been raped, and now this unfortunate decision comes along."

Women interviewed by the Times were most concerned about Judge Compton's emphasis on the fact that no physical force had been used to overpower the victim. Joan Robbins, a rape-crisis hot line director in Los Angeles, said, "being in a moving vehicle controlled by a man who taked a helpless women to a secluded location is supposedly not enough to frighten a woman into believing that she will be raped. As it stands, this decision will mean that a lot of women who have not been beaten or confronted with a weapon will be afraid to seek redress for the crime."

In light of these decisions, female hitchhikers (and women in general) should take a few simple precautions to insure a fair day in court. Dress conservatively-- long, baggy dresses are recommended. Avoid entering areas known for their sexual permissiveness. A sign bearing the words "Warning: I do not expect to be raped" should be prominently displayed upon your person at all times. When kidnapped by a rapist, struggle sufficiently to incur a severe beating. (While x-rays of internal injuries will be useful in court, highly-visable bruises and contusions are most desirable.)

"Bye Bye Birdie": Never bores, but never captivates

by Richard Sebak

Bye Bye Birdie is a dated work of the American musical theatre. It can be presented now, seventeen years after its Broadway opening, as an interesting period piece if sufficient care is taken with the recreation of the era, if some snappy direction enhances the inadequate book, and if lots of energy is loaded into the production. The mounting now being presented by the Workshop Theatre in special cooperation with the Drama Department of A.C. Flora High School succeeds only in the last respect. This is a spunky production with what-looks-like-a-cast-of-thousands, but it falls short in both its presentation of the late 1950's and its attempt to provide a captivating evening of theatre in spite of the awkward play which ties the songs together.

Director Bette Herring has mounted the play with this huge cast and a minimum of imagination. Every line was taken at face value; every scene was arranged in the same mundane semi-circle fashion. Her show never bores but likewise never captivates.

The talented Kay Holly was the show's musical director, and her piano led the three-piece orchestra which accompanied the various songs and dance jin the show. Some of the songs are very familiar, especially "Put On A Happy Face," but others are remarkably alike. Charles Strouse wrote the music without paying any attention to the possibilities of rock'n' roll, and Lee Adams penned the lyrics. The songs are snappy enough to pull the book along through two acts.

The story of Bye Bye Birdie is based loosely on the drafting of Elvis Presley into the army. It has so many half-plots and such a lack of purpose that it is obvious that even the playwright, Michael Stewart, couldn't decide what or whom his play was about.

An ersatz Presley by the name of Conrad Birdie, a favorite of screaming American teenagers, can no longer avoid Uncle Sam's call. His manager/songwriter, Albert Peterson, has a domineering mother and a desperate girlfriend named Rosie Alvarez who dreams up a great PR stunt: Before he goes into the service, Conrad will bestow a farewell kiss on an All-Amerian teenager picked at random from the files of the Birdie Fan Club.

Rosie picks Kim McAfee of Sweet Apple, Ohio. Kim has just been "pinned" by her boyfriend, Hugo Peabody, and her parents are suffering from the king of insignificant fears which bother Moms and Dads in the silly pre-Vietnam, assassination, pre-Haight-Ashbury years.

Sweet Apple topples before the rock'n'roll singer and doesn't recover until it is announced that Kim will be kissed on the Ed Sullivan show. Hugo is upset. Dad is ecstatic. Kim is confused. Rosie still wants Albert. Albert's mother is ubiquitous and interfering. Conrad drinks beer.

Some of these characters might have merited one's attention and concern had they been skillfully developed by careful interaction of the director and cast members. That doesn't happen to any noticeable degree in this production. There are several good performances, but no one establishes an outstanding or unusually memorable character.

Pam Bailey dances and sings well and looks a lot like Mary Tyler Moore. As Rose, she is OK. She doesn't create an especially sympathetic character but she is pretty and maintains her quick smile and perserverance throughout.

Richard Bailey looks less than Albert's thirty-three years, but he likewise sings and dances well. He never projects a beleivable personality of this man torn between his mother and his girlfriend. Albert must be a little odd; Bailey never dares to step beyond All-American respectability.

Jim E. Quick as Mr. McAfee, Kim's father, goes to the opposite extreme. He mugs and squeezes funny bits out of his character until he becomes ludicrous and unbelievable as a Mid-Western homeowner and father. Drucilla Brookshire provides a more credible mixture of hilarity and respectability as Mrs. McAfee. She and Quick are achingly overblown however in the Ed Sullivan Show scene, the play's most chaotic and embarassing moment.

Ann Benson plays a fine Kim. She appears to be more than seventeen but manages to be believable throughout and does a good job with her big solo number, "How Lovely To Be A Woman." For the part of Hugo Peabody, Sam Sexton is an unusual choice. He looks more like Kim McAfee's son than her boyfriend, and he never once appears to be an All-American boy. He has plenty of zip but is unconvincing as a guy who would punch Conrad Birdie in the mouth on nationwide TV. Hugo has got to be an undeniable wholesome high school kid confused by his girlfriend's fate. Sexton is not aided by the dancing either; his entrance in the "Telephone Hour" number is totally inappropriate.

The show was choreographed by the two aforementioned Baileys. They apparently have a lot of trouble designing convincing dances for American men, and their decision to ignore the dancing styles of the fifties is baffling. Do they really believe that finger-snapping transforms third-rate movements into dances of that period?

John Grant is pretty good as Conrad Birdie. Early in the show he stands center stage and twitches his leg as if he had to find a bathroom quickly, and this twitching never quite equals the sexual hip-gyrations of Elvis the Pelvis, but his rendition of 'A Lot Of Livin' To Do" is a definite high point of the second act.

Director Herring has apparently hoped that a lot of details would be overlooked by the audience. Why is the Fan Club File such a tiny box? Should Mr. McAfee be reading the Wall Street Journal? Can't John Grant be taught to burp realistically? Why did the costumers make such a half-hearted attempt to recreate the styles of the fifties? Surely Albert Peterson never wore double-breasted sport coats or bell-bottomed trousers at that point in his life. Were all the boys in the show unwilling to get authentic pre-Beatles haircuts? All these small concerns detracted from the total effect of the play and prevented my total absorption in the action.

The opening-night audience loved the show in spite of its many weaknesses. Perhaps the combined energy of the cast members was enough to capture the hearts and minds of most audience members. The production did not deserve the standing ovation which it received, but any local theatre-goer knows such adulation is easy to come by in Columbia.

The Supreme Court on the run: part II

by Herb Buhl

The U. S. Supreme Court, Osceola contributor Herb Buhl wrote last week in the first of a two-part series on recent court decisions, "has chosen to totally ignore precedent cases as thought they never existed. At times, "Buhl said, "the majority of the Court has had to suffer lapses of realism in order to reach their conclusions."

To back up his claim, Buhl offered examples of decisions in the areas of abortion, capital punishment, segregation and education reached during the 1976-77 term—decisions Buhl contends indicate "an almost callous and cavalier disregard for human rights and human liberties."

In this week's concluding peice, Buhl reviews decisions on other fronts which he likewise believes support his contnetion that the court is in full retreat from precedents established during the 1950s and 60s protecting civil liberties and individual rights.

Herb Buhl is staff attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union in South Carolina.

In the area of freedom of speech, the Court continued its trend toward protection of "commercial" speech under the guarantee of the First Amendment. In a significant "commercial" speech case, the Court struck down a township ordinance prohibiting the posting of real estate "for sale" and "sold" signs on private premises. Following its previous line of decisions protecting commercial speech in areas of abortion referral and drug advertisement, the Court concluded that the ordinance acted to prevent its residents from obtaining information which"...is of vital interest to Willingboro residents, since it may bear on one of the most important decisions they have a right to make: where to live and raise their families." The Court held that an ordinance "...which impairs 'the flow of truthful and legitimate commercial information' is constitutionally infirm."

This language clearly forshadowed the Court's decision in Bates v. State Bar of Arizona. On June 27, 1977, the court determined that the restraint by the Bar Association on the flow of information through truthful newspaper advertisements concerning the availability and terms of routine legal services violated the First Amemdment. In striking down Arizona's disciplinary rule against attorney advertising, the Court determined that "the disciplinary rule serves to inhibit the free flow of commercial information and to keep the public in ignorance."

The Court's 5-4 decision, though written very narrowly, should provide the consumer with adequate information concerning the availability of legal services and the rates of at least very routine legal services. Only time will tell whether Chief Justice Burger's criticizing dissent will be accurate when he warned that dissemination of incomplete information will "be worse than no information at all." (The Federal Trade Commission is already undertaking legal action against the American Medical Association and the American Dental Association challenging their restrictions which prohibit advertising.)

On more traditional free speech ground, the Court held that New Hampshire's motorists could lawfully cover that portion of the State license plate bearing the ideological message "Live free or die." The Court could find no compelling state interest in requiring a citizen to display an ideological slogan to which he had moral, ethical, religious and political objections. The Court held that an individual's First Amendment rights included both the right to speak freely and the right to refraim from speaking at all. "However, where the state's interest is to disseminate an ideology, no matter how acceptable to some, such interest cannot outweigh an individual's First Amendment right to avoid becoming the courier for such a message."

Employment Discrimination

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 made job discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin illegal. Subsequent Supreme Court decisions significantly strengthened this law. In 1971, the Court held that theoretically "objective criteria for hiring and promotion" were discriminatory and therefore illegal if they resulted in a relative disadvantage to minorities without a "compelling business purpose." The case involved written tests for employment.

The Court stated that under "the act, practices, procedures or tests neutral on their face, and even neutral in terms of intent, cannot be maintained if they operate to 'freeze' the status quo of prior discriminatory employment practices."

The Court expanded this concept to cover recruiting practices, job placement, transfers and promotions. This effort to end job discrimination received two serious setbacks last year. In perhaps the single worst decision of the past 80 years, according to some court observers, the Court in Washington v. Davis held that adverse racial impact in the use of employment tests by the District of Columbia did not make out a case of discrimination in the absence of proof of racially discriminatory purpose.

The case involved black applicants whose applications to become police officers in the District of Columbia were rejected. The plaintiffs had challenged the recruiting procedures and written tests used by the district of Columbia and had proved that (a) the number of black officers was not proportionate to the city's population mix; (b) a higher percentage of blacks failed the test than whites; and (c) the test had not been validated to establish its reliability for measuring job performance. The Court, by way of a footnote in its opinion, in effect, overruled 16 previous decisions of the Court which had granted relief because of evidence of adverse racial impact in employment, urban renewal, zoning public housing and allocation of municipal services.

Unfortunately, Washington v. Davis is already being interpreted by numerous lower courts as requiring a plaintiff to prove that employers and public officials intended to discriminate. If they do discriminate but don't admit it, many courts refuse to grant relief. Several courts, however, have held that a long history of discrimination is sufficient to prove discriminatory intent, even under this latest decision.

In the International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. U.S. the Court extended this concept of intent and held that seniority systems that perpetuated the effects of discrimination were not illegal as long as the systems themselves were not intentionally designed for discriminatory purposes.

The Court found that the company had engaged in a system-wide pattern or practice of employment discrimination against minority members. Nevertheless, they determined that the seniority system was entirely "bona fide", applying to all races and ethnic groups, and was negotiated and maintained free from discriminatory purpose. The Court concluded that..."an otherwise neutral, legitimate seniority system dies not become unlawful...simply because it may perpetuate pre-act discrimination." Many jobs have become open to blacks only in the past few years. Under the Court's ruling they will be most vulnerable to layoffs and fewer promotions.

The Court significantly limited an employer's obligation to reasonably accomodate the religious practices of its employees under Title VII in TWA v. Hardison. The Court ruled, 7-2, that an employer was not required to transgress the seniority system established by a collective bargaining agreement to accomodate an employee whose religion prevented him from working Saturdays. The Plaintiff was a member of the World Wide Church of God. One of the tenets of the religion is that one must observe the Sabbath by refraining from performing any work from sunset on Friday until sunset on Saturday. The Court went on to hold that Title VII's religious accomodation provision did not require an employer to accomodate the employee's religious practices if the cost of doing so either in lost job efficiency or in higher wages, was more than minimal. The Court determined that TWA had tried to accomodate the plaintiff within the bounds of seniority system when it held several meetings with him and authorized the union steward to search for someone who would swap shifts with him.

Title VII regulations had made it unlawful for an employer "not to make reasonable accomodations, short of undue hardship, for the religious practices of his employees and prospective employees." Disregarding several viable alternatives outlined by the Court of Appeals, the Court decided that TWA had made reasonable efforts to accomodate and futher efforts would create an undue hardship on the Company. With regard to the seniority system, the Court affirmed its earlier decision: "Thus, absent a discriminatory purpose, the operation of a seniority system cannot be an unlawful employment practice even if the system has some discriminatory consequences."

To reach such conclusions the Court had to disregard all of the previous law in the area and the legislative history and intent of Title VII expressed by Senator Jennings Randolph, "...to assure that freedom from religious discrimination in the employment of workers is for all time guaranteed by law."

Justices Marshall and Brennan chastised the Court for establishing "a principal that an employer need not grant even the most minor special priviledge to religious observers to enable them to make the cruel choice of surrendering their religion or their job....The ultimate tragedy is that despite Congress' best efforts, one of this nation's pillars of strength--our hospitality to religious diversity--has been seriously eroded. All Americans will be a little poorer until today's decision is erased."

The rights of women to equal employment opportunities fared no better. In General Electric v. Gilbert, the Supreme Court ruled that an employer's disability benefits plan did not violate Title VII because of its failure to cover pregnancy-related disabilities. Thus, under G.E.'s disability plan, a woman was required to spend her own money to buy a personal disability policy covering pregnancy disability whereas a male at the same plant without extra expenditure was covered against all periods of disability

The Supreme Court reversed, six to three, a lower court finding of sex discrimination in the company's disability plan. The Court could find no showing that the exclusion of pregnancy disability benefits from the plan was a pretext for discriminating against women.

In Justice William Rehnquist's view:

"Pregnancy is, of course, confined to women, but it is in other ways significantly different from the typical covered disease or disability. The District Court found that it is not a 'disease' at all, and is often a voluntarily undertaken and desired condition...."

Justice John Paul Stevens in his dissent disagreed and pointed out the obvious:

"The rule at issue places the risk of absence caused by pregnancy in a class by itself. By definition, such a rule discriminates on account of sex; for it is the capacity to become pregnant which primarily differentiates the female from the male."

Housing Discrimination

In 1968, Congress passed the Fair Housing Act which banned discrimination on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin in the sale or rental of housing, Housing segregation, however, continues to be one to the most difficult problems faced by the courts.

Courts.

The 1974 Housing and Community Development Act requires communities that apply for grants for water and sewer systems, urban renewal, and other capital construction projects to provide low-income housing for poor people. In the only housing discrimination case decided by the Court this term, the Supreme Court held that it was not inherently unconstitutional for a nearly all-white suburb of Chicago to refuse to change its zoning laws to permit housing for people of low and moderate incomes, even if one of the motivations for the zoning ordinance was racial discrimination.

In Village of Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp. the Court considered whether the denial of a rezoning application by the Village Planning Commission was racially discriminatory. The zoning was necessary to provide federally assisted, racially integrated low and moderate income housing for Arlington Heights. The Court, again relying upon Washington v. Davis, held that proof of racially discriminatory intent or purpose was required to show a violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court concluded that official action would not be held unconstitutional solely because it may result in racially disproportionate impact.

The Court then outlined the factors to be considered: disproportionate impact; historical background of the decision, particularly if it reveals a series of official actions taken for invidious purposes; the specific sequence of events leading up to the challenged decision; departures from normal procedure, and the contemporaneous statements of decision makers (legislative or administrative history).

The court set down a very stringent and difficult standard of proof in order to show discriminatory purpose or intent, despite a congressional mandate to promote fair housing throughout the nation.

Criminal Law

During the 1975-1976 term, the Court established an overall trend restricting Fourth Amendment Rights protecting against unreasonable search and seizure. The authority of police to arrest or search without warrants was also strengthened. The Court even held that bank customers did not have Fourth Amendment protections against compelled production of their bank records.

This term the Supreme Court continued this swing toward a more restrictive view of the rights of the accused.

In Weatherford v. Bursey, the Court, seven to two, held that neither the Sixth Amendment nor the Fourteenth Amendment was violated when Weatherford, a SLED undercover agent, attended two strategy conferences between Bursey and his attorney.

Bursey, a student at the University of South Carolina, was convicted in State Court of malicious destruction of real property when the Richland County Selective Service offices were vandalized in 1970. Bursey and Weatherford both participated equally in the demonstration; both were arrested and charged. Weatherford was immediately released and the solicitor continued the masquerade by arranging for Weatherford's bond and arranging for a lawyer to represent him. Subsequently, Weatherford, Bursey and Bursey's attorney met on two occasions to discuss the upcoming trial and defense strategy.

At the State trial, Weatherford, the only witness who could identify Bursey and place Bursey at the scene of the crime, was called to testify for the prosecution where his status as an undercover agent was revealed for the first time.

The, U.S. District Court had dismissed Bursey's complaint, but the Court of Appeals reversed, holding that Bursey's constitutional rights to a fair trial and effective assistance of counsel had been denied by the prosecution's intrusion into the defense counsel's discussions.

The Supreme Court held that there was no violation of constitutional rights since Bursey never proved that Weatherford had even conveyed any information to the solicitor.

"As long as the information possessed by Weatherford remained uncommunicated," the Court ruled, "he posed no substantial threat to Bursey's Sixth Amendment rights...Weatherford went, not to spy, but because he was asked and because the State was interested in retaining his undercover sevices on other matters and it was therefore necessary to avoid raising suspicion that he was in fact the informant whose existence Bursey and Wise already suspected."

One wonders how you would ever be able to ascertain whether or not information was communicated in such circumstances. The question is also raised as to why Weatherford did not merely say his lawyer had told him what all criminal lawyers tell their client—"don't talk to anyone else about the case."

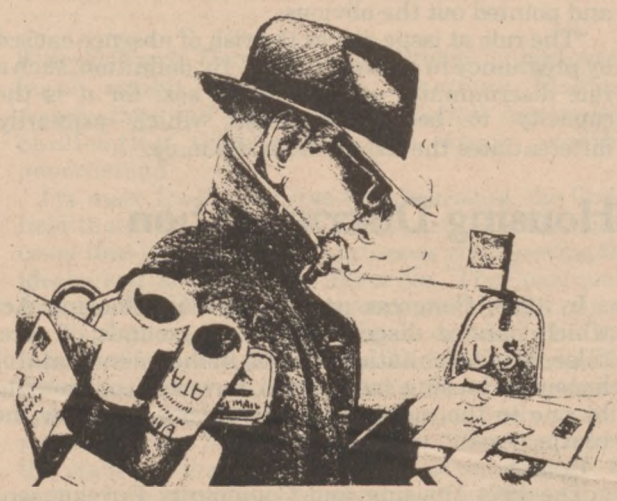
Justices Marshall and Brennan dissented and objected to even the narrowest of openings to the practice of spying upon attorney-client communications. "...(T)he integrity of the adversary system and the fairness of trials,"they wrote, "is undermined when the prosecution surreptitiously acquires information concerning the defense strategy and evidence (or lack of it)..."

In U.S. v. Ramsey, a six to three decision, the Court held that the First and Fourth Amendments pose no ban to a customs inspector's warrantless search of incoming international mail. The customs inspector had a suspicion that the letters contained contraband, but not probable cause--the usual standard required when a legal search is conducted. A 1971 postal regulation authorized such searches where there was "reasonable cause to suspect" contraband.

Justice Rehnquist, writing for the majority, declared the search at a New York post office constituted a "border search" and thus did not require either a search warrant or probable cause under the border search exception to the Fourth Amendment.

Justice Stevens, writing for the dissenting judges, expressed concern that the decision opened the door to wholesale, secret examination of all incoming personal letters carried in international mail. Stevens concluded that "throughout our history Congress has respected the individual's interest in private communication. The notion that private letters could be opened and inspected without notice to the sender or the addressee is abhorent to the tradition of privacy and freedom to communicate protected by the Bill of Rights."



In cases involving prisoner's rights, the Court held that prisoners had no First Amendment right to form a labor union or conduct union meetings within a prison setting. However, in Bounds v. Smith, the Court, six to three, noting the cost of prosecuting a constitutional right cannot justify its total denial, ruled that States must protect the right of prisoners to meaningful access to the Courts by providing them with adequate law libraries, or in the alternative, making legal assistance available at the initial stage of preparation of writs and petitions.

Conclusion

The Supreme Court adjourned for the summer on June 29, 1977. The next term begins October 3, 1977, and the Court already has several cases involving important individual liberties awaiting its return.

Arguments will be heard on the rights of children whose parents want to commit them to a mental hospital, and in a case involving mandatory retirement of older employees. In one of their final acts of this term, the Justices agreed to hear arguments next fall on Ohio's death penalty law.

The leading case next term may be California's attempt to retain a special admissions program for blacks at the medical school at UC—Davis in the face of a challenge by a disappointed white applicant. The case, University of California V. Allan Bakke, involves the University's policy of reserving 16 places in each beginning medical school class specifically for "disadvantaged" applicants. Bakke sued the University after he was denied admission. The case presents real difficulty in that there appears to be no evidence in the record before the Court to show past discrimination by the University. If the Supreme Court applies its new-found test requiring proof of discriminatory intent or purpose, the Court's decision could completely overturn the present law regarding quotas for hiring and/or admissions.

This term did little to erase the growing image of the Court as a tribunal ready to narrow the protection guaranteed each citizen by the Constitution and to side-step major issues and leave their resolution to Congress and State Legislatures. This term would have to be characterized as almost unrelievedly dismal, with retreats in race and sex discrimination as well as abortion.
